THE GREAT CHAIN ROBBERY

In the past few years, bicycles have become very popular with people interested in cheap, non-polluting transportation and in enjoyable exercise. Bicycles have also become popular with people interested in crime. Thefts of bicycles are on the increase in Edmonton, and although there are no statistics relating to the incidence of theft on the university campus, it can be assumed that thefts are increasing here, too.

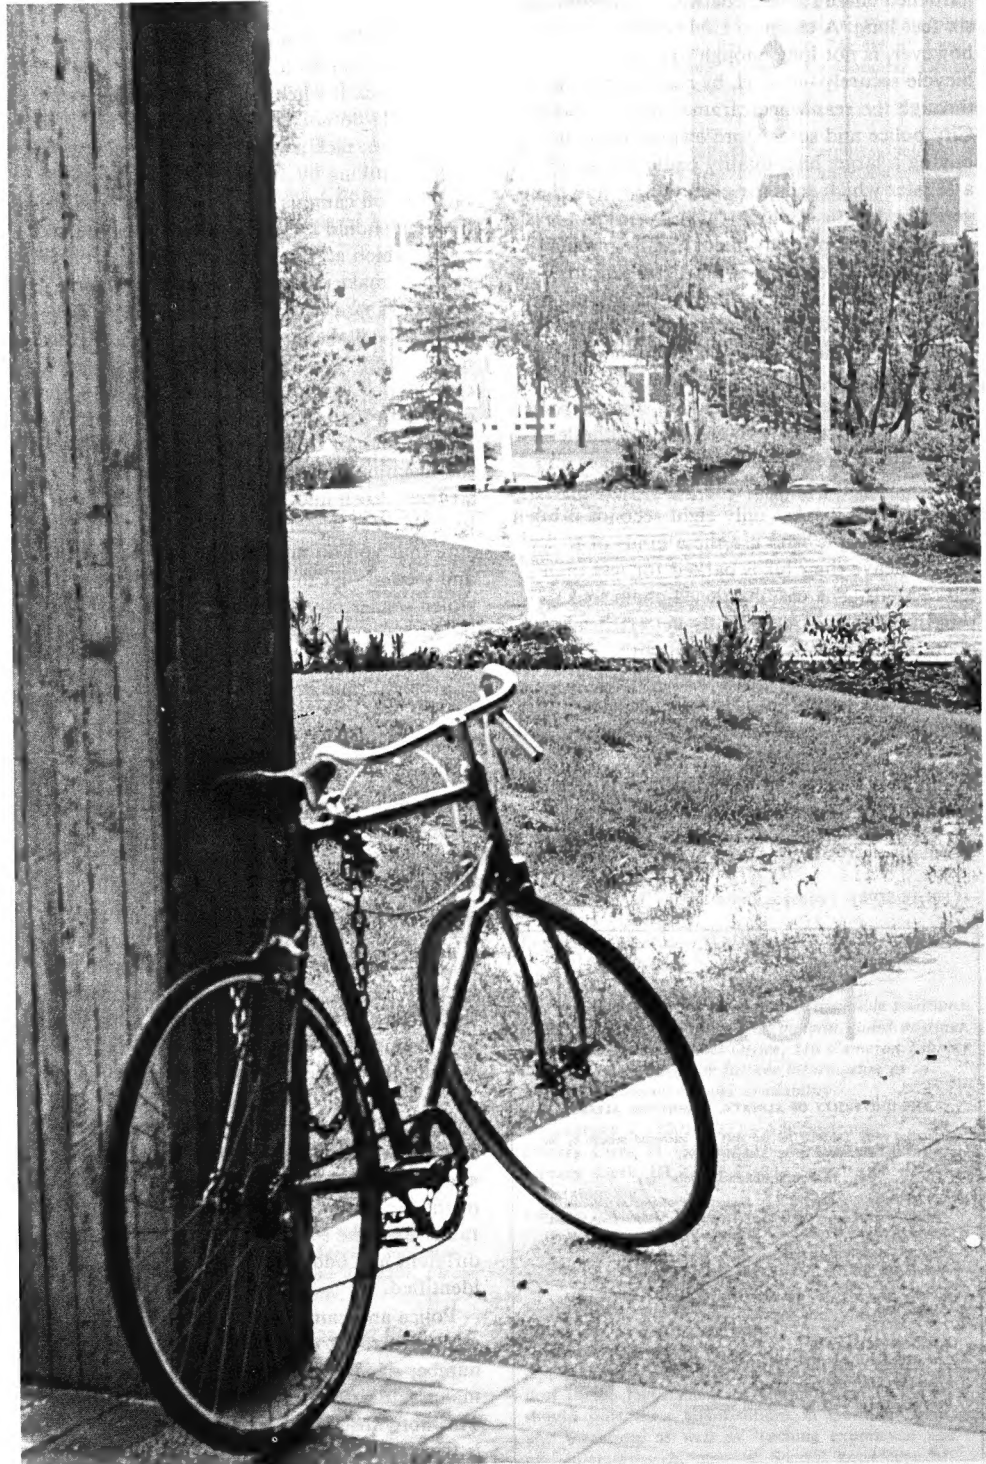

The rise in popularity of the 10-speed has meant that more people are buying more expensive bicycles. Demand for these bikes often exceeds supply. These conditions combine to make the theft of bicycles an attractive proposition for thieves. With more bicycles around, thieves find stealing easier. Stolen bicycles are easier to dispose of and can be sold at more profitable prices. For every standard bike stolen, there are ten 10-speeds stolen.

Last year in Edmonton, there were 3,341 bicycle thefts reported to city police; in 1973, the figure was somewhere around 2,500. The situation has become serious enough to warrant the formation of a special bicycle detail. The exact figures for bike thefts on this campus are not known because bicycles are private property and their theft is reported to city police more often than to campus security.

As the business of bicycle theft becomes more lucrative, the methods of theft become more sophisticated. The increased number of bicycles makes more bikes available as potential targets for thieves. There is little that the bike owner can do about the expertise of the thief. Owners, however, have the responsibility and can take some preventive measures to make their bicycles less available for theft.

Unfortunately, many bike owners are not fully aware of the problem—until the bicycle is stolen. Some owners even neglect to lock their bikes when parking them. Most of the bicycles on this campus, however, are locked.

Nevertheless, many owners use inexpensive and relatively ineffective locks. The common kinds of locks such as cables and chains which come equipped with a padlock or combination lock are not sufficient to prevent the serious and determined thief. The bullet-type combination locks on the cable locking systems, for example, are opened very quickly and easily.

Forrest Bard

The bicycle thief these days often uses boltcutters or sidecutters when he steals locked bicycles. Another popular tool is the hacksaw blade. Tools such as hammers and pliers or vice-grips are used also.

The major bicycle dealers in Edmonton mainly sell locks which are entirely vulnerable to cutters and hacksaws. They sell case-hardened chain locks of between three and six feet long. A chain or cable of three feet, however, is not long enough to lock the bicycle securely—that is, by running the chain through the rear wheel, frame and front wheel. City police and some store owners recommend buying a large, high-quality padlock (such as a Master which sells for around $5), and then getting a length of chain (as heavy a gauge as is possible and convenient), and wrapping it in an old inner tube or plastic tubing to prevent scratching and chipping of paint. The Master padlock can be cut eventually, of course, by a thief using a hacksaw or boltcutters, but it is not easily pried or picked open. Of all the kinds of locking systems sold, the cable type, usually 3/16" thick is the least successful in prevention of theft. It takes about five seconds for a thief with small boltcutters to cut it, and it takes only eight seconds using a hacksaw. People who use these kinds of locks seldom leave their bikes parked for less than ten seconds. The case-hardened chain locks, usually 3/8" thick, are slightly better: it takes about eight seconds to cut them with boltcutters, and a hacksaw does not work.

There are two brands of bicycle locks on the market which are considered to be the best. They do not appear to be available in Edmonton. One is the "Kryptonite." It cannot be cut by either large or small boltcutters, but it can be cut by a hacksaw in about a minute and a half. The best and most effective lock is the "Citadel." It is a large U-shaped, padlock-like, lock of case-hardened steel, and it will withstand the use of both boltcutters and hacksaws. In the US it retails for about $22. Information about it can be obtained from Bike Security Systems, PO Box 197, MIT Branch PO, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02139.

Even if your bicycle lock is not of the highest quality, though, there are still some things you can do to safeguard your bike. Always lock it when you park it, of course. If possible do not park it in an area which is too remote; pick a place which has plenty of people walking by at all times. Most parking facilities on campus are good in this way. Also, the area should be well-lighted. Slot-type bike racks, which are the predominant kind on this campus, make it difficult to lock the front wheel, frame and rear wheel. Posts or pillars—not trees—make good locking places. Always make sure to lock your front wheel securely, especially if it is the quick-release kind. Often one sees a lone front wheel locked solidly in a bicycle rack or to a railing while the rest of the machine is in someone's garage being stripped down and prepared for sale. If you lock the rear wheel in the racks, first make sure that you do not damage the gear assembly, and second that the front wheel cannot be stolen separately. Some people recommend taking your front wheel with you when you park and lock your bicycle, but this is convenient only if you have a quick-release front wheel and if you have someplace to put the wheel wherever you are going.

If your bicycle has been stolen, the chances for its recovery are greater if you have taken some protective measures when you first purchased it. In Edmonton, the tracing of owners of stolen bikes is made difficult by the absence of any bicycle registration program. Nevertheless, you should keep a record of your bike's serial number, and make a detailed, accurate description of the machine, including the make of the bike, its model number and any distinguishing features and details. This will aid the police in making an identification of the bicycle if it is found abandoned somewhere or if someone tries to sell it. Another suggestion is to put your name and address in the handle bars. A color photograph of the bicycle might also be helpful. A rather extreme suggestion is to paint the bike in different and odd colors so it can be easily identified.

Police and campus security members in various parts of the US have proposed a number of ideas on ways that bicycle manufacturers can help in preventing thefts. This notwithstanding, the final responsibility is the owner's. In Holland, Germany and other European countries, bicycles are left unlocked on the streets and they seldom are stolen. That, however, is not the situation here. Therefore, if you own a bicycle, and wish to continue to own one, you should be alert to the possibilities of theft. If you like your bike so much, think how much some thief might like it too.

EXTENSION LIBRARIAN RETIRES

Mary Dodds retired as Extension Librarian July 1 after more than thirty years of serving the University. Following her graduation from the University of Alberta with a bachelor's degree in Commerce she began her working career with Alberta Government Telephones. Leaving there to join the University in 1942, she served as secretary to a succession of University presidents from 1942 to 1954. At that time she took a year's leave to complete her Master of Science degree at Columbia University, returning in 1955 to assume responsibilities in the Extension Library in 1956. C.M. Lockwood, Director of the Department of Extension made the following comments regarding the contribution Miss Dodds has made to the University and the community:

For twenty years Miss Dodds has guided the development and administered the Extension Library. The service has been, and is, very important to those residents of the province who live outside of towns which provide public library service. There have over the years been serious budgetary and other problems which Miss Dodds has had to overcome. Frequently it has seemed as if the Extension Library was all but forgotten as the University worked to cope with its rapid internal expansion during the late fifties and the sixties. Certainly Miss Dodds had trouble making her voice heard and getting high enough priorities assigned to the needs of the Library. It is to her credit, however, that service has been maintained and improved and she can take satisfaction in the fact that her work has done much to build the image of the University in the more remote corners of Alberta.

Although Miss Dodds retired officially as Extension Librarian, she will continue to

TEMPORARY HOUSING PROGRAM

With the vacancy rate in the University area virtually non-existent at .2 percent, further measures are underway for bringing some relief to what is foreseen to be a crisis situation in student housing this fall. The Student Housing Registry, in addition to its other efforts, has initiated a temporary housing program which will accommodate students while they are looking for permanent residence elsewhere. Made possible by a grant of up to $8,500 from the Board of Governors, the program makes use of four trailers leased for this purpose, each containing four rooms and sleeping four persons per room. Two of the rooms will be used as office and storage space leaving enough room for up to 56 people each night. The temporary housing units will be set up in the Arts quad east of HUB between Rutherford Library and the Tory Building sometime before August 16. At a minimal cost per night the temporary shelter will be available to students for up to four days. This service will be open 24 hours a day and will continue until mid-September when the situation will be assessed as to the need for extending it.

For those interested in old things there is a course on "Fossils of Alberta," and one on "Antiques." "Creating a Storybook for Your Child" is one of the courses on writing which are being offered; others are "Writing General Non-Fiction" and "Writing Local History."

Most of the courses begin in October and continue for approximately eight weeks; "Creating a Storybook for Your Child" commences on September 25, however. CONDOMINIUMS: CONCEPTS AND CHALLENGES

The Department of Extension is making available two publications which arose out of the conference on condominiums held in January. The first, the Student Handout Kit, contains a copy of conference highlights; the Condominium Property Act; a Report on Condominium Housing by the planning department of the borough of Etobicoke; selected chapters from Alvin B. Rosenberg's book Condominium in Canada; the chapter on condominiums from the Alberta Land Titles Practice Manual; and other related material. The kit costs $6 per copy.

The other publication is the Transcript of the Proceedings, an edited version of the addresses delivered at the conference. Topics covered are: legal aspects of condominiums with discussions of bylaws, mortgage financing, purchases and sales, and management and insurance contracts; condominium interrelationships with discussions of the relationships and issues which arise among those involved in condominiums; financing and re-financing; sale and re-sale; and future direction in condominium development. The proceedings booklet costs $12 per copy.

There is a special price on a combined package of both the kit and the proceedings for $15. More information about these two publications can be obtained from the Department of Extension, Corbett Hall, 82 Avenue and 112 Street, Edmonton T6G 2G4.

DOCUMENTARY HERITAGE

Documentary Heritage, a new long-term exhibit, opened August 1 at the Provincial Archives of Alberta, 12845 102 Avenue. The exhibit is designed to acquaint the public with the material preserved in the Provincial Archives. The Archives has the responsibility of preserving documentary materials relating to the province such as photographs, diaries, early newspapers, ledgers of organizations, maps, private papers, family letters and official records of various levels of government.

The exhibit may be of particular interest to the university community insofar as it makes known the type and range of materials available for research. The Provincial Archives exhibit is open daily from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.; the reference room and offices are open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR

The 375-member Mormon Tabernacle Choir from Salt Lake City will give two concerts in Edmonton. On Thursday, August 21 they will appear at the Edmonton Coliseum, and on Friday, August 22 at the Jubilee Auditorium. For forty years, the choir has performed over CBS, and has participated in the inauguration of the President of the United States, as well as singing before government leaders and officials in Europe, Japan, and Australia. This is the first time the choir has visited Edmonton.

Further information can be obtained from Tom Davies at 432-3438. Tickets are available at all Woodward's stores and at Bonnie Doon.

LEGAL ASSISTANCE ON PLANNING AND ZONING MATTERS

As part of a credit course in Land Use Planning, the instructor, Frederick A. Laux, Acting Dean of Law, wishes to assign a few third-year law students to help community and other citizen groups who are having planning problems with legal content. This is to give the students first-hand experience in the field and at the same time to render assistance to the community. If you are involved in or know of an organization that could use this kind of help, please contact Professor Laux at the Faculty of Law; phone 432-5539.
